The Petersburg Wellness Consortium

The Petersburg Wellness Consortium (PWC) was launched in Fall 2012 by Dr. Maghboeba Mosavel, Associate Professor in the Department of Health Behavior and Policy at Virginia Commonwealth University in the School of Medicine and Dwala Ferrell formerly of Pathways, Inc. This academic-community partnership, known as the WE Project was established to address obesity in Petersburg. Support for the WE Project and the academic-community partnership was funded by the National Institute on Minority Health and Health Disparities (1R24MD008128). It was the work of this partnership, and in particular, the WE Community Health Leadership Council that provided the impetus, support, and time to ensure the sustainability of the PWC.

Members of the Leadership Council included: Virginia Commonwealth University, Pathways, Crater Health District, Virginia State University - Cooperative Extension Services, The Cameron Foundation, Petersburg YMCA, Petersburg Parks and Leisure Services, the Black Nurses Association, Community Gardens Network, and Mama Ruth's Meals.

The PWC was launched after several community meetings were held by the WE project in the Spring of 2012. During these meetings, diverse community stakeholders, including residents, gathered to determine a health priority for the WE research project. These community meetings were well attended and highly engaged. After the community input was incorporated and the WE research grant submitted, Dr. Mosavel decided to launch the PWC independent from the WE project. The PWC was established with the recognition that it is important to "build something" that lives on beyond a research project. Petersburg community and community organizations' enthusiasm and strong commitment clearly indicated a need for a consortium that would work towards being the umbrella organization for health and wellness in Petersburg. And so, the PWC was formed.
